A free and open source alternative to Adobe Photoshop is GIMP. 1. See what kind of edits you can make Photos are often edited in Photoshop to improve the aesthetics of the image. You can use this tool to find out what changes you can make to a photo. If you take the photo-editing step before you begin editing, you may not notice many new possibilities. However, if you edit later, you can discover new edits. The changes can be positive or negative, depending on the image. To do this, open the photo in Adobe Photoshop. Then go to the Tools menu, then Edit > Edit a Copy. If you're using CS6, you can do this by pressing Ctrl+C, and then Ctrl+F or Command-C, and Command-F. After the file is saved, go to the Bridge, press Ctrl+U, and Photoshop Elements will open the file as a duplicate. You can compare the original to the edited version, making sure to zoom in on the areas that need attention. 2. Change the photos' color or brightness Photos come in a wide range of colors, but they can often look either too dark or too light. You can use a tool to make a photo lighter or brighter, but you'll need to spend some time looking for the right color. If you want to change the color without altering the lighting, you'll need to use a color correction tool, such as Photoshop Elements' Color Balance adjustment. If you want to adjust the brightness, you can use one of Photoshop's tools or create a new layer. You can use the Brightness/Contrast adjustment tool by pressing Alt+Shift+U, and then scrolling through the options with your mouse. You can also take a look at the Camera Calibration section of the dialog box. You can also make a photo brighter and more colorful by creating a new layer and filling it with a color that's lighter than your original color. Then make sure the foreground color is lighter, using the Info panel to find the right color and clicking the Color Picker button. 3. Improve picture quality Most photos don't include enough light. You can use Photoshop Elements to change the brightness and add shadows to your photos. You can use the tools by pressing Ctrl+I, and then

Q: How to return JSON body from a controller in ui-router I have setup my AngularJS application using ui-router. I wanted to read the body of a file being uploaded to my controller. This is being used by a javascript application in the browser. All of this is very basic stuff so maybe I am overlooking something. I would like to make a call to the controller to read the body of the file that is being uploaded and return it as JSON to the browser. I am sure this can be done, but I do not know the correct approach. Can anyone show me the correct approach to this? Or should I be doing this another way? Thank you! A: If you have an AngularJS app where you are receiving a file-upload, then your controller is typically run on the server. From there, you would send a "PUT" request to the url, with the request body being the file you just received. See this article for an example of how to handle file-upload with Angular and the XHR (XMLHttpRequest object). If your controller is to be run in the browser, then you can still handle the file upload like so: AngularJS $scope.uploadFile = function(file) { if (file!= null) { var xhr = new XMLHttpRequest(); xhr.upload.onprogress = function(e) { if (e.lengthComputable) { $scope.progress = Math.round(e.loaded / e.total * 100); console.log("Upload progress: ", $scope.progress); } } xhr.open("PUT", "/upload-path", true); xhr.setRequestHeader("Content-type", "application/json"); xhr.send(file); } } Controller Code app.controller('FileUploadController', function

Q: Text over image in Ionic3 I have a problem using a HTML element above an image in Ionic 3. When I add a text element above my image (a circle image) it resizes it, but I want to keep the image to be it's normal size, and also be able to see my text over it. I am using following img tag: Where I want to display a text, I have the following tag: {{"WELCOME"}} Where grayText is a value being taken from a variable. As I said, the issue is that I want to keep the image to be it's normal size and be able to see the text over it, the text is added to the img tag. If I add the text directly to the element, it will be a fullsize text, and not a text over a smaller image. So I want to add the text to the img tag. How can I do this in a proper way? A: You can use the ion-text element to add a label as a child of an ion-img. Then just set the background-position to be center. {{"WELCOME"}}
