Note: This article may or may not be compatible with your version of macOS or iOS. New iOS 11.4 Features The new iOS 11.4 features include Group FaceTime, an activity tracker that lets you know how many steps you've taken, and a kids mode that lets you assign your phone to your kids' handsets and configure multiple child devices at once. Group FaceTime lets up to 32 users video chat via Wi-Fi or cellular data while in the same area The feature lets you call up to 32 users (normally up to 16) and video chat with them at the same time. You can also share a photo or video over a group chat and view photos from your contacts. It is suitable for groups of family members, friends and classmates to communicate with a group of people at once. Activity tracker lets you know how many steps you've taken If you are struggling to keep up with your daily routine, iOS 11.4 introduces an Activity Tracker that will let you know how many steps you've walked, run, cycled, and swam and how many calories you've burned. You can manage your Activity Tracker in Settings > Health > Activity & Sleep > Activity Tracking. With this feature, you will now not only know how many steps you've taken, but also how many calories you've burned. To use the Activity Tracker, launch the app from the home screen. Activate the tracker by tapping the dark grey square or the red number, then tap the number to view the detailed workout summary in the app. You can then tap the number to set your goals. Your number of steps and calories burned will update as you meet your goal. Kids mode lets you give your kids' devices access to your data, customize the lock screen, control notifications, and more The Kids mode in iOS 11.4 lets you create up to five child profiles. You can assign different passwords to each profile and control the device separately for each kid. For example, you can set a profile with a password to only allow one user access to the phone. You can then control the lock screen settings, notifications, and more for each kid's profile on the phone. To create a kid's profile, launch the Settings app > Parental Controls > Create a Kid Profile and select a name for your child. The Parental Controls section 1d6a3396d6
