Q: Calculating cumulative probability function for the number of infected computers I am trying to create a function for a computer problem where I need to calculate the cumulative probability function for the number of infected computers. This has a random component which can range from 0 to 2. Below are two sample runs and the desired output. I'm looking for a formula that does this for random n . $n = 4$ Infected = 0 $\text{Math.round}(1 - (1 - P(\text{Infected}=1))^n)$ $n = 3$ Infected = 1 $\text{Math.round}(1 - (1 - P(\text{Infected}=2))^n)$ desired output $n = 3$ Infected = 2 $\text{Math.round}(1 - (1 - P(\text{Infected}=3))^n)$ A: If you use the `pnorm` function in R, as in this dataframe example, you can easily calculate this: `df [Study of electrocardiograms of patients with chronic ischemic heart disease using a single-lead Holter system]`. By using the single-lead Holter electrocardiography a total of 30 patients aged 55-70 years presenting with various clinical manifestations of coronary heart disease were examined. The examination was performed in a cycle of one week; each examination was preceded by 24 hours of self-monitoring. All the patients were found to have a large number of episodes of atrial fibrillation. Mean duration of episodes was 6.6 +/- 2.9 s; mean number of episodes per hour was 2.8 +/- 1.5. A total of 14 episodes of atrial fibrillation were recorded and their dynamics was shown by cosinor analysis. Increasing number of episodes was associated with more severe clinical manifestations of coronary disease
