In this post, you'll learn how to make a Video Slideshow in Windows 7, 8.1 or Windows 10. A lot of computer users love Video Slideshow to make a lovely trailer for their video. Step 2: The first thing to do is to open the Photos application. But before you click on the Pictures tab, you'll have to go to

Home tab and then click on the Videos folder. You'll now see a list of all your videos and photos in that folder. Select all your pictures and videos, and then right-click on them to show a menu. Select the option to Copy. You don't need to select all the items, just your desired ones for adding a slideshow. Step 3: Click on the Pictures tab in the Photos app, and then right-click on the pictures you want to use. Step 4: Click on the option to Create Slideshow. When prompted, use your mouse to move your slideshow to the desired location on your PC. Step 5: Now comes the time to choose the video that you want to use as a background of the images. Simply select the video you want to use, and then click on Open. Step 6: Click on the Slideshows tab in the Photos app, and then select the slideshow you just made. Step 7: Double-click on the images tab in the slideshow to view all the pictures in the slideshow. Step 8: The slideshow is all ready! Now all you need to do is to choose a nice background image, choose the resolution you want, and then click on Create. A new folder is created on your PC, which you can use as a cue for naming your slideshow. Visit our web page to get more details about Video Slideshow. Today we made a Nixie tube clone in a remote NodeMCU ESP8266 to control the LED Strip project. The circuit is based on the online base Nixie Tube Electronics and comes complete with 1 circuit board, 9 Leds with 28mm to 40mm, 2 Nixie tubes and a remote NodeMCU with WiFi shield installed. The part you're going to learn in this project is how to change the Leds in your project and the delay between the 2 Nixie tubes which are the two main features that make it different and unique. I did this project using the online base version and also an extra circuit board with more Leds. In this version the project came with 2 Leds and 3 tubes a69d392a70

To describe the prevalence of peer victimization and its relationship to loneliness, depression, and suicidal ideation among Chinese adolescents, and to identify personal and school factors associated with peer victimization. Data were collected from a multistage random sample of Chinese adolescents aged 12-18 years (n = 8315) in 1999-2000. Data were collected in the classroom using a random effects probit procedure. Results indicated that an average of 28.0% of Chinese adolescents had been subjected to at least one form of peer victimization in the past 2 weeks. Friends, siblings, and teachers were the most common perpetrators. Peer victimization was positively associated with loneliness, depression, and suicidal ideation in Chinese adolescents. Personal factors associated with peer victimization were poorer school performance, male gender, and more emotional problems; these factors also were positively associated with other socio-emotional problems. School factors associated with peer victimization were being bullied at school, being targeted by teachers, and fewer friends at school. A number of personal and school factors appear to affect Chinese adolescents' experience of peer victimization. These results suggest that intervention strategies designed to improve peer victimization in Chinese adolescents should take into account personal and school factors.Risk factors and prognosis of stroke in the Chinese population. Stroke is a leading cause of disability and death. Prevalence data, determinants and risk factors of stroke in the Chinese population are lacking. This study aims to investigate these issues in a cohort of subjects in Guangzhou, China. In the community of Guangzhou, China, all stroke cases were actively and prospectively collected from January 2001 to December 2007 by the stroke registry (Guangzhou Stroke Registry). Potential stroke cases were ascertained by face-to-face interviews using a uniform diagnostic questionnaire. Stroke subtype was categorized according to the
