Our rate of dementia has almost doubled to one in four, and the impact of this on the UK economy and society cannot be ignored. This is the theme of a new report launched today by the Alzheimer's Society in partnership with our Charity Partnerships Trust (C-P-T), which is supported by Virgin Money. The report, a unique study of data collated from the English Longitudinal Study of Ageing (ELSA), suggests that the financial burden of dementia – now affecting one in three people over 85 – will come to £21bn by 2020. While the rate of dementia is now growing more quickly than ever before, these figures suggest that one in four of today's 85-year-olds and younger will be diagnosed with dementia. Dementia is the single biggest cause of death for people over 85, costing the UK an estimated £10bn a year. As the UK population ages, dementia will become the single biggest cause of disability and social care demand, increasing the burden on the NHS and social care and taking strain on families and carers. The ELSA study finds that the number of people with dementia in the UK is predicted to increase by more than 100,000 by 2020. Women are twice as likely to be diagnosed with dementia as men, with those who have completed their full-time education more likely to be diagnosed with dementia than those who have not. With a predicted 4.2 million people already suffering from dementia by 2040, it is clear that many people will be affected by the condition. However, the increase in dementia rates is predicted to be more rapid than for other age-related illnesses such as diabetes and cancer. The report highlights that the impact of dementia on older people and carers is enormous, resulting in 2.5 million unpaid hours of care, and an estimated £11bn of unpaid care. From an economic perspective, the report
