Creates a window with a scrollable list of wallpapers in the background. When the user clicks with the left mouse button on an item in the list, it will be displayed in the preview window and a background update will be performed. Release Notes: Minor bugfixes and general performance improvements SHORT DESCRIPTION Wanna see the power of using BPM to drive the Windows desktop? Did you know that you can add an entire list of background images to your Windows desktop using an XML file, and then use the BPM to drive it, without the need for a desktop image file. This means you could use an image of a cool starry sky to drive your Windows desktop. By using the BPM, you could also have multiple BPM sets to drive multiple graphical displays, just as you would have multiple desktop image files. If you do not have the BPM, get the latest version of Background Buddy for Windows. This is a sample BPM I have used for testing purposes. Download the XML file, and an example of the output window. A BPM takes a list of wallpaper image files and determines which one is appropriate for the display context. The BPM is driven by the XML file and runs in the background, immediately after a new desktop is loaded, or when the user logs in. If there is a match, the BPM will update the desktop. How do you use it? Create a list of wallpaper image files. This could be a text file, a list in a text file (77a5ca646e
