It's been a while since we've seen a truly great piece of music made for the medium of film. But in 2012, Norwegian musician Halfdan Tanderup knew he had to make a record to match the beauty of the films he saw. In the past, his music has been inspired by films he's seen, but there was something different about the recent projects. "With 'Lemonade' I watched the film 'Beasts of the Southern Wild' and I got an inspiration and a concept of how to realize a pop song," he tells Tom Phillips. "I got an idea of creating a song that was like the experience you get from watching the movie. It was a combination of creating a song and making a music video out of it." "I love the way it turned out," he continues. "I made the song in one day and I loved it when I was done. I really tried to make it feel like it was something that came out of the film. I remember one day when I was working on
