Our friend Mhailo has recently sent us a video showing the interface for a new program he's been working on. The name of the app is NotepadPro, and it's basically a re-imagining of Microsoft Notepad. And what better way to do this than by adding a whole bunch of very useful new features to the free program? New features include automatically adding comments, macros, autocomplete, and multiple cursors. NotepadPro also has a vertical menu, icons, a search bar, the ability to place bookmarks, multiple windows and tabs, and color schemes. Text may be copied, pasted and formatted without losing the formatting. Export and save files has been simplified. Numerous bugs have been squashed. The best thing about the new NotepadPro is that it's entirely free. Here is what to expect if you download the free version: Requirements: Windows Vista, Windows 7, Windows 8, and Windows 10. Ever since we mentioned the Inkdrop app, we've been waiting for the moment when they released a new version. And now they've done so and it's looking very nice indeed. The new version introduces a new theme, new customization options, a less cluttered interface, and a bunch of other improvements. The new theme is a solid dark gray with light gray backgrounds and subtle shading. All navigation and controls have been changed to be much more streamlined. The app now remembers all of the settings that you've used previously, and many of the settings now come with presets. That includes things like the size of the window, tool bar, toolbar and icons, the thickness of lines and more. This version of Inkdrop can be used to work with many different document types, such as PDF, and common file formats such as MS Word, HTML, CSV, etc. The program can read multiple files, quickly switch between them and let you select what needs to be edited before opening it. You can also save your work to PDF and then print, or export a PDF. Lines, curves and polygons may be easily added to the drawings by using simple right-click or arrow key shortcuts.
