What's New in the SyncTrayzor?

> ** Syncthing is a fast, reliable and distributed file-synchronization application. It is intended for every day use as a file-synchronization service, with the goal of having data spread over multiple computers be immediately available to all those that need it. ** > Syncthing can be easily used to provide your own personal or business file-synchronization service, or it can be simply integrated into an existing system. ** > ** Syncthing does not require a central server. Data is synchronized automatically, asynchronously, and locally. It keeps track of file changes and keeps itself up to date automatically. ** > ** Syncthing is easy to use: You create a folder that contains data you want to share, add a file to the folder (which is then shared), and then tell your friends and relatives about the folder. They can visit the folder and download any new file you have added. ** > ** Syncthing is very secure: It uses strong and cryptographically provably secure cryptography for its data-storage, and it is specifically designed to ensure that the data can never be altered by any unauthorized user. ** > Syncthing's model is one that is based on a permission model where the permissions and access rights are designed to be strictly defined in a central configuration file, and are then applied in a simple client/server protocol that does not require the client to know about the data-storage system at all. The server can be completely hidden from the client. ** > Syncthing can be used to synchronize user-defined data. For example, it can be used to keep the documents for a company private, while allowing the company access to them, or to enable a group of friends to share an album for their private photos. ** > Syncthing is easy to install and set up: You can just add a directory or folder to the list of shareable folders, and then share the folder and all the data contained in it. You can control who can read, write, and delete files from the directory and subdirectories. ** > ** Syncthing can be used to synchronize arbitrary data: You can create a folder to share objects, such as documents, music, videos, code, photographs, books, and so on. If you can write a command-line application that can read and write to these objects, you can put it in the Syncthing configuration and create a folder to share the objects, even if the files are stored on a third-party storage system. You can easily write a client that can be used to access the Syncthing configuration from a web browser or another client. ** > Syncthing's permission model is open and flexible: You can create and modify permissions at any time and for any object in the Syncthing directory tree. This provides you with a way
