I have been using Photoshop for over 10 years now and have gone through countless tutorials and books, so I thought I would share some tips and tricks for anyone looking to learn Photoshop. I've been making a lot of changes lately and getting comments that my own Photoshop skills could use some more exposure. Taking our first look at the world of the Photoshop editor. This will cover everything you need to know to make your first Photoshop masterpiece! #1 – Type something in, hit Esc, and don't let go When you are designing an image or have a plan, the fastest way to do this is to enter text into Photoshop. To enter text into Photoshop, go to any canvas and type something in the box. Hit 'Enter' on your keyboard and drag your mouse over to any spot on the canvas. Your text will now be in the spot you placed the cursor on. Let's start with a simple example. I'll start by drawing a few circles: This was super easy. Now I'll fill this canvas by selecting the entire canvas: It's easy to do, but the hard part is how it looks: You can't do much with the canvas after selecting it in this way, so the first thing to do is to make it a bit more useful. To do this, I'll use Edit > Define Pattern > Dividers: This did the trick, but it made the edges of the canvas hard and wonky. What would happen if we let Photoshop define the edges, instead? To make it easier to draw, select the Rectangular marquee tool. I select this tool by pressing ⌘ while the cursor is in the corner of the canvas, or by pressing 'R' on my keyboard. The Rectangular Marquee tool enables you to draw, resize and edit the selected area. Now, let's start drawing some more shapes, one by one: This is pretty easy to do. The more you practice drawing shapes, the better you'll get at it. But there is one major downside to using the Rectangular Marquee tool: When you want to edit an existing shape, let's make it easier to do that. From the menu bar, select Edit > Edit Paths or press Shift+Alt+E. Doing this enables you 05a79cecff

James Obergefell is calling on the U.S. Supreme Court to rule that individuals are entitled to marry whomever they choose — regardless of their sex, sexual orientation, religion or gender. “Marriage is the union of one man and one woman — and the nation’s highest court must ensure that this enduring truth about the freedom to marry is defended in future years,” he said in a statement released by his attorneys following yesterday’s court arguments in the case. “We are grateful that the justices of the Supreme Court provided a signal that their views on gay marriage are evolving.” The 2015 ruling is one of the cases which could come before the Supreme Court in 2016, when it will decide whether the states are required to recognize same-sex marriage. A gay couple’s lawsuit is asking the Supreme Court to declare that same-sex couples have a right to marry in all 50 states under the U.S. Constitution. The Court should rule that under the U.S. Constitution, gay couples are entitled to the same rights, and are equal under the law, as heterosexual couples. In a 4-4 decision, the U.S. Supreme Court in 2015 struck down as unconstitutional the Defense of Marriage Act, which defined marriage as between a man and a woman. However, it did not rule on whether states are required to recognize gay marriages performed in other states or nations. The same-sex couple’s marriage petition was filed in U.S. District Court in Cincinnati. Today, the Supreme Court heard arguments on the constitutionality of Ohio’s Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA). The states represented by the Alliance Defending Freedom argue that same-sex marriage is not a constitutional right. They pointed to the Supreme Court’s decisions in Loving v. Virginia in 1967 and Obergefell v. Hodges in 2015, which struck down state bans on interracial marriage. The states also called into question the Supreme Court’s decision in Windsor v. U.S., which said the federal government could not recognize same-sex marriages that had been performed in the states. “The federal government has taken a hands-off stance on who is married and who is not,” said Alliance Defending Freedom attorney Jeremy Tedesco. “Marriage is a fundamental right protected by the 14th Amendment,” said Tedesco. ♦
