3 comments Eeekkk.. There was a google drive compatibility problem in my chrome version. So a third party download was required to fix it. If any online video player is not working in your android device just try google drive as an alternativeQ: How do you import puppeteer objects into the web page that you are working in? I'm trying to get puppeteer to work in a web page. My first thought was to run puppeteer through node.js, and have it interact with the page I am loading on. I'm not sure if this would work, but I was able to print out the page by changing out the webPage.on. Would this even be possible to do in node? Anyways, I have the following script that opens the chrome browser and loads the chrome page from the URL that I provide: const puppeteer = require('puppeteer'); async function start(){ const browser = await puppeteer.launch({ headless: false, }); const page = await browser.newPage(); const url = ""; await page.goto(url); await page.evaluate(() => console.log('this is a test!')); await browser.close(); } module.exports = start; The issue that I'm running into is that I would like to pass in a puppeteer object to the page object so that I could do something like this: async function start(){ const browser = await puppeteer.launch({ headless: false, }); const page = await browser.newPage(); const url = ""; await page.goto(url); await page.evaluate(() => { const target = puppeteer.target();
