next Image 1 of 2 prev Image 2 of 2 Protesters want Morocco's King to cancel plans to host the U.N. General Assembly in a bid to continue pressuring the government on issues ranging from its human rights record to its peacekeeping operation in the Central African Republic. The supporters are planning to gather outside the royal palace in the Moroccan capital, Rabat, Friday in a show of solidarity with those currently being held in a detention center. Marwan Ben Abdellatef, one of the founders of an opposition group, is among the detained. His trial began May 13 and his next appearance is Friday. Government spokesman Tawarit Naatia says Ben Abdellatef must be tried in a military court under a special law that would guarantee a fair trial. Morocco has been struggling with a series of scandals for years that have eroded the image of its rulers at home and abroad. Looking for beta testers for a new Win32/Mac VNC client - viggity ===== viggity This isn't finished yet, but here is an idea of how it would work: There is a bunch of local VNC servers (we did this on purpose to make sure people can use a variety of VNC servers). You connect and you're connected. \- you can have full-screen, half-screen, full-screen+pan and full-screen+ scroll. It will update to you when you change. \- the connection stays on while you're logged in. It should be easy to connect in. \- you can have multiple windows, you can easily just connect to whatever application is running. \- you can run as a command line application, you can run from an IDE. \- it can be transparent. - ~~~ moe Great ideas, thanks. Could you perhaps elaborate on "update to you when you change"? That seems to be the more interesting feature to me, especially the "enter full screen mode" feature. I've been using for a few months now and it's just about perfect for "hacking" together some stuff with the wirth of time. It's also very simple to use. Might just be nice if it had this ability :) ~~

What's New In?

Congress members and journalists tend to quote the World Health Organization's (WHO) Director-General on the coronavirus pandemic, but now there is precedent for his optimism – a publicly released transcript of a meeting of the WHO's top officials in December 2019 proves it. WHO is famous for its caution – denial of the Covid-19 threat when it was initially unfolding, delayed issuing a public travel advisory until Italy reported a terrifying death toll, and a global reluctance to declare a pandemic, in part due to concerns about market instability. But WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus appeared to be at least as worried as his critics, and on December 30, 2019 – a few weeks after the first Covid-19 cases emerged – he began an internal WHO meeting by sharing his "profound gratitude" that he had "many, many weeks to prepare" for the meeting. "The latest news is extraordinarily concerning and the spread of this disease is a worldwide emergency," Tedros said, in a frank acknowledgement that it had "well and truly exploded" and set in motion the need for the unprecedented level of WHO leadership now needed. "The spread of the virus is a tragedy and a crime," he went on. "If we fail to act now, this will be a catastrophe and a stain on the international system." Tedros noted that this was his "first-ever video conference" – likely a reference to the fact that it had never been done before. He then turned to the virus' trajectory and noted that "the epicenter has now shifted to the Americas" and noted that the WHO needed to take into account the "rapid transmission" to "shift the focus of the response from containing the outbreak to mitigating the morbidity and mortality that could result from this epidemic." "For the past 2 weeks, the virus has been spreading like wildfire," Tedros said. "The magnitude of the crisis that we are facing is unprecedented." The most common interpretation of the transcript is that in early January – far too late to help – Tedros looked at the trajectory of the epidemic and concluded that a full-blown public health emergency was underway and that the virus was an existential threat to humankind. Others have taken the comment as a sign of
