and the chunk of jquery: `$(function(){ var error = 0; $(window).keydown(function (e) { if (e.keyCode == 32) { $('#button1').trigger('click'); } }); });` What i'm trying to do is disable the button AFTER the keypress with spacebar but i can't figure out exactly what to put in the if statement. Any help would be great... A: // Stop the button from actually being pressed - only allow the spacebar to be a valid command if (e.which === 32) { $('#button1').trigger('click'); } Q: Get the first element of a list without using filter I am trying to get the first element of a list without using filter. I know that in python you can use list() to get a list object, but how do you get the first element using that? >>>D = [1,2,3] >>>my_list = D.first() >>>my_list 1 A: To get the first element of a list, first you need to ask Python for it. Then to be even more explicit, stick an if statement in front of it. The first element of a list is accessible in Python through the list object. >>> my_list = list(D) >>> my_list [1, 2, 3] To access the first element of a list, use the list() call which constructs a new list. >>> my_list = list(D) >>> my_list[0] 1 Here's an explicit loop to show what happens: >>> my_list = list(D) >>> my_list [1, 2, 3]

The landscapes of the western hemisphere are now home to close to 8,000 animal and plant species, but once there were only about 150 species. The biomes are an ecosystem that has its own dynamics and this also means that there are biomes that are dominated by one single species, or endangered by the extinction of one or more species. And as new species show up, the existing species have changed and become extinct. For example, prior to the American Civil War more than 280,000 bison roamed the plains, but now there are only about 500. Or do you know what real bighorn sheep look like today? They don't look like the bighorn sheep that your grandfather saw. Since the Civil War, the horse is the main danger to the environment and is the preferred prey of the predator that once hunted the bison. The snow-covered mountains are usually not inhabited by snow and cold-loving animals, but at this time of year they are home to an abundance of wild animals. Bears and wolves live the winter in them. This ecosystem is very rich and so every tree and plant that you can harvest has its own animal that either searches for food or scavenges. So far, we have seen that animals that can't withstand cold are living in these biomes, but did you also know that in the winter there are no flowers, even the trees are dead and they have no leaves? It's the same for people. There are many biomes where you can find people who are not accustomed to living in the cold, but with the help of hypothermia treatment you can survive in a biome where it's freezing. And finally, we also have seen that animals come to food that they must bring back and even farm animals that don't use natural resources are living in these biomes. Farm animals with human management are also a risk to the environment, but can become a benefactor if the animal is domesticated. The farm of Old Thorne was a big, 100-farm-strong farm, which provided space for cows, sheep, poultry and horses. But in the end, they all died of diseases that they had carried from the tropics. What's at stake? Diseases are the natural scourge of this game, but they are not the only hazard, there are also wild animals and insects that attack and can make you suffer. You will have to fight against them in order to survive c9d1549cdd

Dark Ages is played in an advanced action-adventure style, similar to Lucasarts' SCUMM series. You are a gamer-wizard on a quest to help restore the flow of magic by carrying out a series of dangerous tasks and solving puzzles to save your princess and find the magic treasure. You can move around the screen using your mouse, and there are 4 characters (including you and your partner) to do everything. The game plays as follows: You start at the beginning of the scene; your partner is at the right side and you are at the left side. When you click the mouse, the character you want to move goes up or right. You can click as often as you want, and if you click twice within one frame, then only one of the two characters will move. You must watch your rear-view mirrors closely to avoid falling into holes. The controls are as follows: Clicking the up, down, left or right arrows uses your character's ability. Clicking on the chest door uses your partner's ability. There are many chests in each level, and some of them contain extra characters that you can possess. You can decide which to possess at will, just that you cannot possess them until you possess the character that owns the chest. The monsters come in a variety of shapes and sizes, and they often move in a pattern. You can determine how you want your character to act, but you cannot decide what to hit or where to hit them. There are many traps and underground areas, including monsters and puzzles. The game progresses in an easy to moderate difficulty level. The difficulty level of the game changes when you find the magic treasure, and the level becomes more difficult after you find the first treasure. Game Notes: 1) You can freeze time when you click on the left mouse button. 2) Pressing the space bar makes your characters freeze or stop. 3) Pressing the enter key chooses what you want to do: open a chest or learn a spell. 4) Pressing the ESC key exits the game. 5) The game tips are easy to read, and I recommend that you turn the game on for at least a few minutes before playing to get your timing on. 6) Learning to play the game properly takes practice. I put up a few screens that will explain what happens at various times. These are tricky to explain, so I have tried to make them as simple as possible. 7) If you are having trouble was recently laid down by the German federal government in the port of Wilhelmshaven, in a huge hangar running for 35 kilometres. It measures 12,246 square metres and can accommodate up to 90 take-off planes of various types. With its 3.5 billion euro construction cost, it was the most expensive German plane of 2014. The public agrees. According to a survey conducted by Hessian polling institute Forsa, 62% of those interrogated wanted a government plane built as soon as possible - the survey's margin of error is 1.7% - while 91% said they knew little about the exact technical contents. Some things are worth their cost. We know that from aviation - because it's safe enough, and the guarantees of the much bigger aircraft are there. It's similar for weapon systems. If it's a vital requirement - for example, the testing of a never-before-fired ballistic missile - then it should be developed, regardless of financial considerations. The aerospace industry in particular offers an important perspective on the future. "This is a new type of industry, opening out in new directions, with innovative solutions, inspiring employees and customers around the world," says Christian Pradel, President of EADS-BAE Systems. None of the company's directors, however, are pilots. They work out of a private "hacker" setting in Munich. And the Board is not in the air. But the Chairperson of the EADS-BAE Systems Aviation Board, Christian Pradel, feels a certain sense of pride. "The board is like a political party with many parties and opinions." And he and his colleagues - about 70 strong - are responsible for promoting the company's interests. But their authority is not unlimited. The whole company's power stems from the Board. Christian Pradel feels pride. "Our Board is like a political party, with many parties and opinions. And that causes us a lot of trouble." Christian Pradel feels pride. "And that causes us a lot of trouble." "There is a different weighing up which is necessary between how a company with outstanding expertise should behave, and how much it can afford with all its money," says Christian Pradel, at the board meeting in the Hochschule für Technik in Munich (photo by Kohler). All directors are men, none of them are pilots. "And we are doing a good job. That's what we are paying taxes for." But the company's board is made up only of companies, and

Advertisement Every time I leave town I wonder if I'll survive the day. I live in Virginia. My son graduates from college and now I'm struggling to make it out to see him. I have chronic pain and can't drive. I have a family full of aging heroes. All of us are struggling to thrive, even just a little. Yesterday a friend said something that brought me to tears - she said "Life's a marathon not a sprint." That's easy to say but so hard to live. I was reminded of the way the phrase is used in our daily lives. I have a friend in West Virginia who has a point in real estate where each person who buys a home buys 1/2 acre. They don't pay much for additional land as they build up the home next door. It's funny and it's really true. Some of us want to stay right where we are even if we grow weary of the battles every day. But many of us long to travel the distances of our home, to reach for new destinations, to battle the unknown and learn the lessons we need to learn. If you'll forgive a little personal confession, for me this phrase has been the motto of the Free State Project, of which I am a member. For the last four years I've been as busy creating a state in the US using only skills I already had and the land I have been gifted in Vermont, as I traveled in an attempt to get others to create a new state. The motto is a catch phrase for our creative activism, and it's been the impetus for some of the greatest breakthroughs in the past year. Why would someone travel 3-6 months to live on a make-believe state in the middle of nowhere? Some of us have had cancer. Some have come from dysfunctional situations. Some just believe that it
