Some have been detained in Istanbul and others in the capital, Ankara, while others are being held across the country. But Turkish opposition politicians fear many arrests will happen behind the scenes, and say the state of emergency decreed last night will not be lifted until July 9. Ankara has also deployed tanks and troops to the streets in an attempt to quell dissent. The Turkish PM has warned against a repeat of the coup attempt, but has also called on people to play a part in a democratic opposition. The coup attempt against the state began at 14:00 local time (10:00 GMT) on Saturday and ended two hours later. media caption A Turkish TV reporter caught on camera addressing a crowd near the tanks image copyright Twitter image caption These are some of the banners left by protesters, bearing slogans against the president Protesters have demanded the reinstatement of the democratically-elected government of President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, something that the government has decried as a "coup". In the initial confrontation, rebels raided the Turkish parliament and took control of the entrance. image copyright Reuters image caption Turmoil continued through the early hours of Sunday in Istanbul image copyright AFP image caption Soldiers set up roadblocks in the main square in Ankara overnight A spokesman for the rebels said the insurgents had ended their takeover, but their communication devices were disabled and they did not know what to do next. Mr Erdogan, who has ruled Turkey since 2002, said he had fired over 10,000 people from state institutions following the attempted coup, as part of his drive to "clear this treacherous organisation". The authorities said it was a coup attempt spearheaded by the Fetullah Gulenist movement, an Islamist cleric whom Mr Erdogan blames for a corruption scandal that has engulfed his government. The Turkish flag was flying at half-mast in the capital on Sunday, but there was no sign of

I usually don't like to review(reviews) about things that were already covered, but this happened to be an exception. First of all, this game sucks. There was literally no reason to play this game besides to get some trophies. The gameplay is terrible, controls are all over the place, and the tutorial makes you question how a game can be so epic with such a boring... Dirty TackleBarry the Ninja possesses a ninja warrior's sense of rhythm, barrelling into a monster at a ferocious run, swinging his weapon out to and behind him to knock his prey off its feet, the nightmarish skull-and-bones trophy of a goblin that sports a grin disconcerting in its facial finery. Screw the score - if this was a game, he'd be a legend. Only more so.88/100 Gamespresso[] Killscreen When I say it's difficult to grasp the concept of a game like NES Monkey Island because of its control system, this is what I'm talking about. This game is such a niche game where you have to use the mouse like a joystick. After twenty minutes it gets frustrating and I just gave up. No hat, no quest, no nothing. Yes, it's a retro game. But what... Gaming NexusWorld of Warcraft: CataclysmI love how the expansion took the experience and brought it to a whole new level. World of Warcraft, after Cataclysm, is at the highest level it has ever been. That is not to say that it's perfect, but it's at a point of prosperity and high definition that we all knew would be coming. Cataclysm is simply a fantastic expansion. It has the history and lore behind it from the beginning that you have all been waiting for.... GoblinoidWhen I first learned about Goblinoid from AllGamers a couple of years ago, I found this game to be a quirky mix of Japanese RPG elements and collectibles. As the reviews started pouring in and finally the game released, I thought, "Well, now I can see how popular this game is." Well, I was wrong. The original game was praised for the music, but Goblinoid is my favorite because of the sound effects and gameplay. There are plenty of custom sounds on board so you're always in sound-check when playing. This alone helps fuel your desire to collect 'em all. A good example of
