Surgical site infection in bariatric patients: A single-center experience. Bariatric surgery, one of the treatment options for severe obesity, has increased in recent years. This study aimed to evaluate the frequency of surgical site infections (SSIs) after bariatric surgery and the risk factors. The medical records of patients who underwent bariatric surgery at our institution from October 2007 to March 2013 were retrospectively reviewed. The data recorded included preoperative and perioperative variables, and the postoperative complications were evaluated according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention criteria. SSIs were observed in 42 (7.7%) of the 547 patients. The overall frequency of superficial infection was 70.4% (32 of 47), and the frequencies of deep incisional and organ/space infections were 35.1% (16 of 47) and 29.6% (14 of 47), respectively. Pneumonia occurred in 28.6% of the patients (14 of 47). Multivariate analysis indicated that blood transfusion was the only significant risk factor for SSIs.
