As shown in FIG. 1, a conventional active matrix display device includes, as its most important constituent element, an image displaying unit 1 that has a switching device for each pixel 2 of a matrix display screen, where such switching devices function to select the image signal applied to each pixel. The image displaying unit 1 is formed on a glass substrate 3. Although not shown in the figure, on the outer surface of the glass substrate 3 are a transparent electrode, arranged in a matrix, to serve as an electrode for applying the image signal to the image displaying unit 1, and a scanning electrode for scanning the image signal which is applied to the transparent electrode, and a signal electrode to supply the image signal which is selected by the switching device. Furthermore, an insulating layer is interposed between the image displaying unit 1 and the scanning electrode. A dielectric layer for storing charge is arranged under the scanning electrode. The conventional active matrix display device is characterized in that the scanning electrode is arranged to be a comb-shaped electrode, as shown in FIG. 2. That is, the scanning electrode 3 includes a plurality of scanning electrodes 4, 5, and e79caf774b
