If you handle multiple accounts when using your computer, you might need a safe place to store them, usernames and passwords included, and doing so without relying on specialized apps can lead to security breaches. PassNGuard, for instance, is one of the applications mentioned above that can help you achieve satisfactory results in storing your credentials in a safe manner. Creates encrypted databases for your credentials The first time you run the application, you will be prompted to create a new database on your computer that will be encrypted in order to protect all the credentials you decide to store in it. You can do so by simply trying to type a passphrase, as the application will automatically detect that no database is loaded and prompt you to generate a new one. Scramble keypad and other security measures PassNGuard was designed for your security and privacy; many handy components have been implemented into it to offer you a safe and efficient credential storage solution. For example, you can't type the master passphrase using your keyboard. Instead, you have to use your mouse and click each character on a scramble keypad (the characters on the keypad pick a new, random position every time you click any one of them). Trying to capture a screenshot or video of the tool in action renders its window entirely black, so no attacker is able to view its contents at any time. Thus, you are protected against both key-loggers and screen-recording tools. Stores usernames, passwords and URLs After you create the database and access it, you can simply add new entries by clicking the "+" button and input the required data in the corresponding

Q: Animate an UIImageView to another instance of the same UIImageView I am trying to animate an UIImageView to another instance of the same UIImageView. Both views are in the same superview. When I click on the first view the animation should start. When I click again on the same view the animation should be executed again. When I click on the second view, the animation should start and when I click on the same view again, the animation should be executed again. I am using swift and I am using the following code: @IBOutlet weak var PlayerView: UIImageView! override func viewDidLoad() { super.viewDidLoad() } @IBAction func PlayerView_tap(_ sender: UIButton) { playerIsShowing = false PlayerView.image = UIImage(named: "playerActive") PlayerView.startAnimation(animated: true) } @IBAction func playerIsShowing_tapped(_ sender: Any) { playerIsShowing = true } Thanks in advance. A: It's very simple, you just need to set the playerIsShowing flag before calling the startAnimation method and set it to false in viewDidLoad method. When the player is not active, the playerIsShowing flag is set to false and you need to set the playerIsShowing flag to true before calling the `startAnimation` method. If you want to use the animation code in the `playerIsShowing` method, just change the `playerIsShowing` method to `func playerIsShowing(_`
