I add another image on top of the first one (on a new background thread). I use Bitmap.compress() to compress the bitmap and then do.recycle() to clear the bitmap and the thread to recycle the object. In this work, we focused on the effect of temperature on species richness, and simply modeled the species occupancy data under this alternative hypothesis. However, these types of models are essentially the same as hierarchical occupancy models in a temporal framework, except that one is derived from species richness data and the other from occupancy data. If one was interested in the effect of time on species richness, one would need to implement a time-dependent hierarchical occupancy

model. The importance of site fidelity {#Sec17}
----- Because site fidelity is inherent in our study area, we hypothesized that sites experiencing high mortality rates would have higher rates of site fidelity than sites experiencing low mortality rates. The results of our analysis of site fidelity support our hypothesis. Sites experiencing high mortality had significantly higher levels of site fidelity than sites experiencing low mortality. Furthermore, adult age was negatively associated with rates of site fidelity, i.e., individuals that were older had higher rates of site fidelity. This result seems to be at odds with our expectation that mortality rates would be positively associated with site fidelity, because individuals that have experienced high mortality will likely not be able to successfully recolonize the sites they occupy during their lifetime. However, this result is consistent with our expectations for mortality rates. In our analysis of mortality rates, we found that areas of high mortality had significantly higher levels of mortality than those areas of low mortality (Fig. 3{ref-type="fig"}). Hence, the sites in which the highest mortality rates are experienced (usually the most peripheral sites) may be those at greatest risk of abandonment. Moreover, high mortality rates may be indicative of poor quality habitat, which leads to greater mortality in individuals that are less experienced. By contrast, the areas of low mortality in our data set were sampled because of their low rate of mortality. Because

Problem with ADAMs. I'm making a port of an old console game in PC. I get the text for all menu options fine, but when I press any of the buttons, the game freezes. I'm new to some of this, and have tried debugging. The game has VGA compatibility, so the console ports that I've played haven't had any problems. For some reason, it freezes when in the menus or the game itself. I can't for the life of me figure out why... any help? Here's the Code: This at least narrows it down to the CCompiler. I'm pretty sure that the CCompiler is fine, because I ran the game through my other debuggers, and it worked fine. Running via the portded Executable, version 3.00, works fine, but the same executable with 3.20 causes the game to crash if I press any of the buttons. SScOD Maker iMapy wrote: the amount of information it gives will make it easier to debug. The error given makes it hard to even narrow down the issue. The error it gives is: Operator expected What make and model is this? (We need a small menu for this).... If it runs in debug with 3.20, it won't run in release without changes. This means the development settings change all the way to release on 3.20. However, the release folder is where 3.00 would put the executable. This must be something with the development settings files, although I don't know what specifically. I'll research this. This is a pretty old game I'm making port, so I've got some room to play around to actually get it all working. S I have limited resources, but I'm about to invest some. If you could help me test Beta 16 dfsnotes.exe, I'd really appreciate it. I'm new, I'm not sure what more information I should provide, but I'm working on it. I've been having trouble with the beta(6.99), mostly the
