Highlights Air India's AI200 Delhi-Kozhikode flight veered off course Vessel with 34 people on board lost contact while passing Anjuna We were told to evacuate promptly, came back to the airport Air India's AI200 Delhi-Kozhikode flight veered off course in the Indian Ocean, the airline said on Saturday, with flight data showing it had lost radio contact with the pilot. The flight AI200 had taken off from Chennai for Kozhikode around 11:00 pm on Friday, Air India said. At 11:15 pm, the Aircraft Communications Addressing and Reporting System (ACARS) message of "Vessel with 34 people on board lost communication" was received by the airline. Flight AI200 had dropped back into the radar of the Air India beacon at Kolkata at 2:15 am on Saturday and the aircraft was flying at an altitude of around 30,000 feet when it lost contact at 6:28 am, the airline said in a statement. The flight AI200 was headed to Kozhikode, around 170 km southwest of the state capital Chennai. We were told to evacuate promptly, came back to the airport The airline sent a special aircraft with a paramedic aboard and search and rescue team to locate the missing plane. "It was presumed that a communication failure had taken place." At the time of the incident, Air India was alerted to the incident, the statement said. A few hours after the flight lost contact, a spokesperson for the Directorate General of Civil Aviation (DGCA) told news agency PTI that the flight's emergency locator transmitter was operational. "The EM locator transmitter was functional as per the DGCA rules. It sends alerts to the air traffic control tower including details of various parameters - latitude, longitude, altitude, etc. The last signal was sent at 11:15 am and the last location provided is of the Anjuna beacon," the spokesperson said. The aircraft lost contact at 6:28 am, around 80 km southwest of Anjuna, he said. Air India's DGCA chief S Sreedhar told 0cc13bf012
