the A's win the World Series again? November 12, 2014 The bookies could have made a good case that the Oakland A's were the worst team in baseball this year, but they didn't. They were an incredible 46-2 to win the American League Division Series in the best postseason performance in history. The odds of making the World Series even once in a lifetime is 3.8 percent. What's wrong with the A's? A lot, actually. First, a whole lot of things, including health, injuries, mediocrity, inconsistency, and questionable veteran leadership. But the biggest reason the A's did so well was the Oakland clubhouse. There were no stupid clubhouse incidents or flare-ups. Just perseverance and leadership, and a lot of it. As long as Oakland was in the game, there would be tension, but the A's never failed, and the result was a five-game lead over Detroit in the AL Championship Series. The difference in the A's clubhouse was a simple one, and it echoed the success of the team. The pitchers pitched well. The team played well. The players were well-liked, and the veteran players provided support and leadership. The younger players were there to learn from the vets. The A's clubhouse was a family. That's what an October baseball season is all about. In October, the winner of the World Series isn't necessarily the best team all year long, or even a better team on a whole than a given opponent. It's about the psychology of the team, the clubhouse, and the players that are part of it. It's about relationships and commitment. Here's the thing, though. In a baseball world where teams like the Detroit Tigers and Boston Red Sox have brought their teams to Game 7 in the ALCS and World Series

Q: Removing pixel artefacts from qimage I have written a static test to produce a matrix which contains a 1000x1000 matrix of 1s and 0s. I then try to do image processing in a loop, which erases the 1's in the matrix as follows:

cv::Mat image(1000, 1000, CV_8UC1);
for(int i = 0; i (i, j) == 1) image.at(i, j) = 0;

However, this produces an effect where there are two black lines where the 1's

have been removed. I tried to solve this by removing the matrix entirely and then reading the matrix in again, as follows:

cv::Mat image(1000, 1000, CV_8UC1);
for(int i = 0; i (i, j) == 1) image.at(i, j) = 0; } } cv::Mat image2;
image.copyTo(image2);

However, I still get the two black lines where the 1's have been removed. I think this is because I'm using opencv and I'm not sure how to fix this. A: Try this: `cv::Mat image(1000, 1000, CV_8UC1); for(int i = 0; i`

Q: How to display a chart from the data in an array using AJAX I want to use AJAX to show the values that are in my array but can't figure out what to do. I've tried coding AJAX with jQuery, but am failing (should be a simple task for a jQuery/javascript newbie). Why is it showing up as [object Object]? My array is called "getBookValues" with values of "The Lord of The Rings Book 3".

var bookValues = [ 'The Lord of The Rings Book 3', 'The Silmarillion']; $(function () { var bookValue = [] for (var i = 0, j =
