To determine whether insulin monotherapy is more effective than placebo in the management of hypertension in black and white patients with mild to moderate hypertension. The study enrolled 211 black and 247 white patients with mild to moderate hypertension who were randomized to receive either placebo or insulin monotherapy for 8 weeks. The primary end point was the diastolic blood pressure (DBP) response to insulin monotherapy as compared with placebo. Mean +/- SD baseline DBP was higher in the black than in the white patients, but there were no differences in DBP and other variables between the 2 groups at baseline. The percentage of patients with DBP less than 90 mm Hg was greater in the white (59%) than in the black (48%) patients, but there were no racial differences in DBP change between groups (P =.17). Despite a higher baseline DBP, both groups had a similar DBP change and response to monotherapy. The response to glucose-insulin-potassium (GIK) was similar between both groups. No serious adverse events were reported. The results of this multicenter controlled trial indicate that insulin monotherapy may be an effective treatment option for mild to moderate hypertension in selected black and white patients.Q: Query the current kind of an endpoints I want to query the current kind of the Endpoint "ms" in the following code static List readableTypeNames(Endpoint.Kind kind, c6a93da74d
