Octane itself is the most accurate and most efficient renderer on the market. Octane supports all of the major 3D file formats, such as Collada, ThreeJS, FBX, and Povray. Furthermore, it supports all major renderers including Blender, Cinema4D, and Maxwell. Also, Octane is continuously being upgraded. The render industry is always adjusting renderers to meet their demands for better performance, support for new file formats, and new rendering models. Lepton is the solution for demanding ray tracing calculations that represent the most expensive tasks in any rendering. With the Lepton Evaluation node, you can render a single ray at a time on your GPU, using specified ray parameters and emitter types. Using Lepton you can greatly improve your render times by doing work incrementally with Lepton, just not all at once. If you need to render a large scene using Octane, this is the most efficient solution. Octane is the most accurate and efficient renderer. Octane is physics based. This means that it works by calculating the intersections between the ray and the visible surfaces in the scene. Octane also provides the most accurate ray-casting within modern renderers. Octane is the most accurate and efficient renderer on the market. A new Random Walk medium allows you to create ultra realistic skin and other absorption / scattering materials in Octane. With Random Walk SSS and Octanes new Spectral Hair Material, you can easily create photorealistic digital characters. The Spectral Hair Material enables different coloring modes for hair, as well as multiple roughness parameters for different scattering behavior along a hair strand.
