You can switch through three presentation types: open, slidedeck, and template. First, click the type that matches the content you're working with, and then you can switch to another one of those three modes as needed. While ProPresenter is in open mode, you can switch back and forth easily. You can make many changes in the open view. The slidedeck and template views provide some edits but not the full range of changes you can make in open mode. Finally, if you've already created something in open view, you can save it as a template to use for future presentations. Finally, you can trim video clips to get to the length you're looking for. Choose to trim clips up front or after they've been added to the presentation. You can also import multiple clips at the same time (up to 100 clips) and organize them or remove them entirely. And finally, you can easily adjust video brightness, contrast, and gamma (gamma in ProPresenters lingo). Do you know how much you can learn about screen design, lighting, video equipment, and the media from the world of film? If so, stop studying Hollywood and let ProPresenter help you put it into practice.
