

R-Studio 5.1 Build 130016 Serial Download ((NEW))

In the following tutorial, you learn how to take an existing Data Model and extend it to fit a new set of data. For example, suppose that you have a Data Model that was created in an old version of Office and is now being used in an Office 365 account where the tools and licenses have changed significantly. The goal is to get rid of the original Data Model and rebuild a new Data Model based on the new tools. Using the native Excel tools, you can easily automate the process of expanding your Data Model to include any additional data in the new Office environment. Not only does this make the process easier to automate, but it also gives you a process where you can make a structured preview of how the new model will look."Build the Data Model on-premise or as a SharePoint site in Office 365."Create an Excel add-in and attach it to a site or template on a SharePoint server."Send the Excel Add-in to a user that has Office 2013 and the new Data Model installed. The user will download and install the add-in."The user can use the add-in to construct the new Data Model in Excel."Send the new Excel Data Model back to SharePoint where it can be used by other users."Make any required edits to the new Excel Data Model."Commit the changes to SharePoint. In the next tutorial, Extend Data Model relationships using Excel 2013, Power Pivot, and DAX, you build on what you learned here, and step through extending the Data Model using a powerful and visual Excel add-in called Power Pivot. You also learn how to calculate columns in a table, and use that calculated column so that an otherwise unrelated table can be added to your Data Model.

R-packages may also be distributed as compiled binaries. Binary packages contain a .tar.gz or .tar.bz2 file containing the uncompressed data files (i.e., the source code and binary files), as well as any configuration files necessary to build the package. The recommended tool suite for building packages is GNU Autotools and specifically autoconf and automake , which are the GNU Standards C and C++ build tools. The packages and devtools directories also include two scripts which could be useful for setting up and building packages. devtools creates a virtual environment with all the dependencies that you need for building packages.
