i tried using adobe lightroom to process the hdr images, but it simply wasn't able to do it as well as photomatix can. i also tried several of the hdr tools available in the batch area, but none of them could get the job done. finally, i decided to use photomatix. after a bit of tweaking, i got the results i wanted. however, at this point, i was getting sick of having to reset all my settings each time i made a change to my preset. this is when i began thinking about what could be done to make it easier. so, i started thinking about it. i began to work on the idea of making a preset which allowed me to change just a few settings, and have it remember them for future use. so, i began the journey of creating photomatix presets. so, here is the result of all that work. the presets are available at > trey ratcliff photomatix presets torrent the presets are photoshop psd files. there is a layer for each setting that you want to change. you can just open the preset, or apply each setting to the layer you want it to be set for. if you want to save your own preset, you simply copy all of the layers into a new photoshop document, and save it. you can then make whatever adjustments you like, and use the same preset for future images. he also has made presets for each one of his tutorials. many of these are already on his site, but if you want to find them, you can scroll down and look for the ones marked "presets" in the tutorial list. photomatix has the ability to do that (at least in lr, i haven't tried aurora), but in aurora 2019, if you group a bunch of images into one, you only get one output, even if you have multiple series of images. therefore, you have to do it manually, which can take a lot of time.

however, for real estate, colors have to look very true, and contrast realistic. i just could not get photomatix to look realistic so i've been spending many hours in lr with the brush tool working on about 20 photos per property to get everything even. and that's after using up to 4 strobes to light various areas in the scene while photographing. this is an on going project to develop and post presets for aurora hdr 2019. ultimately we'll need help from our community. if you're interested in helping, please e-mail kenr at kenrhoda.com, or find me on twitter as @kenrodco or facebook as @kendyroddenr .this project is currently in beta. please report any bugs and or things missing or broken within the presets/actions/etc. to me. i will update the project as soon as possible. however, after the beta period is complete i plan to make the project public and update the links. that being said, there is still some time left to get presets and action presets to everyone. in either case, you've probably come to photomatix for the ability to have subtle adjustments to bring it all together in a final look, with special color effects and toning to enhance your photo without blowing up contrast, making your photo look theatrical, or as if it was shot in front of an aquarium. the key is that this is not done on the hdr image. photomatix can do this on your original 8 or 12 bit image, which is the beauty of it. so all of this is done with photoshop. thank you for reading the blog. i hope you found this interesting and useful. my goal is to point you in the right direction and hopefully help you make great photos. thanks again for reading and i hope you enjoy the product. here are some links to some other pictures taken with photomatix: 5ec8ef588b
