simplifying the algorithm for the diagnosis of undifferentiated arthritis in rheumatology: routine use of serologic tests. rheumatologic literature proposes two sets of criteria to confirm the diagnosis of undifferentiated arthritis (ua). the first set is algorithmic, and uses the number of joints involved, the presence of arthritis, the duration of arthritis, the erythrocyte sedimentation rate (esr), and the c-reactive protein (crp). the second set of criteria also includes esr and crp. to simplify the algorithm for the diagnosis of ua by replacing crp and esr with a routine serologic test, the erythrocyte anti-cardiolipin antibody. we performed a prospective study between january 2007 and december 2008 of patients with ua, and between april 2006 and may 2009 of patients with seronegative ua who were subsequently diagnosed with undifferentiated spondyloarthropathy (spa). the study included a total of 87 patients, of which 13 (11.7%) and 23 (15.4%) were classified as having ua by the algorithmic and the serologic criteria, respectively. of the 87 patients, 55 (63.2%) fulfilled the international union against rheumatism (iuar) 2010 criteria for peripheral spa, 8 (9.2%) fulfilled the modified new york criteria for axial spa, and the remaining 24 (27.6%) had undifferentiated spa. only 2 of 23 patients with ua without previous diagnosis of spa fulfilled the serologic criteria. another study in patients with spa revealed the erythrocyte anti-cardiolipin antibody to be an excellent predictor of inflammatory spa, with an area under the receiver operator characteristic curve of 0.837. the presence of an elevated level of the erythrocyte anti-cardiolipin antibody was highly predictive of systemic spa, with a sensitivity of 92%, a specificity of 82%, a positive predictive value of 91%, and a negative predictive value of 84%. the presence of an elevated level of the erythrocyte anti-cardiolipin antibody was an excellent predictor of inflammatory spa, with a very low rate of misclassification in patients with ua.
